

Once upon a time there was a Woman, who had three daughters. The eldest daughter was named One-Eye, because she had only one eye in the middle of her forehead. The second was called Two-Eyes, because she was like other mortals. The third was called Three-Eyes. She had three eyes. Two were like normal and one was in the middle of her forehead.

Because her second sister had nothing out of the common in her appearance, she was looked down upon by her sisters, and despised by her mother. "You are no better than common folk," they would say to her. "You do not belong to us."
